Description

The carpet is distinguished by a baroque "cartouche" frame that decorates its central part. Lush flowers are presented in a dissection and resemble Western European and Eastern ornaments. These motifs are simplified and stylized, large identical or paired plants have different colors. According to their composition, similar woven products belong to the so-called "gentleman's" carpets. Such works of art were custom woven by the craftsmen according to fashionable foreign samples. But during work the weaver often changed the ornament, introduced new colors and elements, which gave the product a local flavor.
